PROGRAMS AND SERVICES INVENTORY OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

PREPARED BY THE SOCIAL AGENDA WORKING GROUP

Prepared by the Social Agenda Working Group
A Living Inventory

Public governments, Aboriginal governments and non-profit organizations selected members to sit on the Social Agenda Working Group, which met for the first time in October 2001. Our mandate was to prepare a draft Social Agenda for the NWT.

The term "social" includes a wide range of services. These include education, health, income support, recreation, justice, housing, child protection, early childhood programs, addictions treatment, all counseling and healing services etc.

Following up on suggestions people made at the Social Agenda Conference on the Hay River Reserve in June 2001, the Working Group decided to review what social programs and services are offered in different communities and by public and Aboriginal governments. We thought communities, governments and the Working Group could use the inventory to identify funding bodies, identify gaps, look at programs and services in other communities and lay the foundation for individual regional or community plans. We did not prepare the inventory for statistical analysis; it was for qualitative analysis and information.

There were many helpful documents such as the Help Directory or the Recreation and Sport Directory. They didn't contain the entire range of programs and services offered in each community or by each government department.

So we prepared an inventory of programs and services. This was much harder than we predicted. Some agencies, departments, municipalities or Band Councils did not have answers to questions or they were not able to return phone calls. Sometimes people were too busy to talk to us because they are so short staffed and they have so many responsibilities. A few people did not want to talk about the details of their programs because they were worried about how the Working Group would use the information.

For these reasons, and due to the short time the Group had to complete its work, there are gaps in the inventory. Some sources did not provide a break down of what all their employees do. For example, some Band or municipal councils employ lots of people and offer many social programs and services. But most towns and Bands employ people to manage operations, do financial and administrative support, provide municipal services like water, sewage, garbage disposal, bylaw enforcement, road maintenance etc. Some pay employees to sit on the Band or municipal councils. So in some communities it looks like there are a lot of people providing social programs. This is deceiving unless breakdowns are included because most municipal employees do not deliver social programs.

The Working Group talked about releasing the inventory after we had every bit of information but we decided to go ahead after we spoke with service providers and people at community meetings. They said "it's a start"; "nobody has ever put as much information about so many programs all in one place before"; "you're never going to get all of it right"; and "if you wait, the information will be outdated and you'll just have to do it over again."

So we decided to publish this inventory and ask people across the NWT to verify information, fill in the gaps over time and begin to use it as an information tool for community, regional and territorial based planning.

We called it a living inventory because it must be updated regularly. The Draft Social Agenda Report contains ideas about how to ensure this happens.

"information sharing…do an inventory of resources in the NWT and if it already exists make it more accessible to the public…we need transparency in who is doing what, when…how, with who…"

"community exercise…take stock of what we have and what we need, funding sources, programs, etc." (Social Agenda Conference, June 2001)

Despite the gaps, the inventory has lots of useful information about what programs exist, how they are staffed, who funds them and what kind of services they offer. Many people who looked at the draft inventory during community meetings wanted to know if they could have a copy right away even though it wasn't finished.

We encourage people to look at some communities with small populations that manage to offer integrated and comprehensive services. Some examples include the Tulita Wellness Agency, the Holman Hamlet Office, the Deh G'ah Elementary and Secondary School in Fort Providence, the Chief Jimmy Bruneau Regional High School in Rae-Edzo, and the Chief Sunrise Education Centre on the Hay River Reserve.

Based upon the information provided to the Working Group, a few of our smallest communities such as Wrigley, Nahanni Butte and Colville Lake appear to have very few social programs and services at the local level. We know for a variety of reasons it is not feasible or realistic for every community to have a full range of programs. The Draft Social Agenda Report prepared by the Working Group has some ideas about how to assist our smallest communities gain better access to programs and services.

The huge volume of services in Yellowknife stands out in the inventory. This can be mis-leading. Many programs in Yellowknife have long waiting lists and have to turn people away. This is partly due to the larger population. It's also because Yellowknife provides services to people who don't live in Yellowknife. When services are not available in small communities, people are sent to Yellowknife. If we built community capacity in smaller centers, there may less demand upon services in Yellowknife.

The Working Group couldn't gather funding amounts for every service. So we chose one type of program as an example of how programs don't always receive enough funding to meet the demand for the services they provide. We asked Women's shelters in Yellowknife, Fort Smith, Hay River and Inuvik for the amount of funding they receive, how many people they employ, and how many bed spaces they have.

Women's shelters outside of Yellowknife do not have enough core funding to meet the demand in their regions or communities. Alison McAteer House in Yellowknife is not over-funded – it is adequately funded and it turns many clients away due to being full. So the solution is not to reduce funding to the Yellowknife shelter. The Working Group hopes that the Department of Health and Social Services (HSS), the Regional HSS Authorities, communities and the private sector will work together to ensure that shelters outside of Yellowknife receive more support. Some shelters are so short staffed they do not have the capacity to explain their situation to funders or the time to write proposals for extra funding from other sources. So funders may not even be aware of the situation. This is just one example. We are sure other examples exist. Further analysis is one of the next steps we recommend.

We think other next steps should include securing resources to gather more statistics about each community and add them to the inventory. Then someone should enter the information into a database so people can use the inventory to make queries and perform detailed statistical analysis.

The Social Agenda Working Group encourages people across the NWT to use the inventory and to ask leaders to assign clear responsibility for somebody to keep the inventory updated. This document will be widely distributed and accessible to anyone who wants to use it. We will provide copies to all communities and post it on a public web-site.

"ask communities to identify their resources and coordinate and inventory of social agenda resources and a demographic study of people and resources in the community…check with groups to see if the resource list is already available and keep it up to date" (Social Agenda Conference, June 2001)
